Jim, I did not see in the Post what I heard on the radio 5 a/m. in one version and 2:30 p.m. in an expansion: the claim by Sen. Long's former secretary that he had been poisoned through candy given him by a Clayton, Mos man in the first story and that Mrs. Long had filed a $3,500,000 alienation suit against the former secretary. Naturally, no autopsy and the coroner not even a physician. Now I don't know if there is anything to this. But you should remember that Percy Foreman at about the right time went to Clayton, NOT to court, to see a client. When aside from travel costs he charges $200 an hour, it has to be a wealthy client with a serious problem. At this point you phoned. One of the possibilities is what Bud had in mine. It is, however, only one. I would begin by following it because of our Partin interests. But I would not lose sight of the other interests if that is nonproductive.
